

Data Confidentiality Disclosure

CLL Society is a 501c3 nonprofit organization focusing on patient education, support, advocacy, and research. Dedicated to addressing the unmet needs of the CLL and related blood cancer communities, explaining the rapidly changing therapeutic landscape, the importance of clinical trials, supporting and building patient networks, engaging in research, advocacy, and educating providers and patients.

Profile data will only be reported in the aggregate and will not be reported with identifiable personal information in any way. CLL Society staff will protect your data from disclosure to people not connected with the organization and will review all data to ensure that it does not contain any information that could potentially be used to directly or indirectly identify you. Any such direct or indirect personally identifiable information will be stored in a designated secured database that will only be used by CLL Society staff. However, complete confidentiality cannot be guaranteed. In addition, de-identified (i.e., anonymized) data from your participation may be shared with other researchers or stakeholders. The results of this research may be presented at scientific or professional meetings or published in scientific journals and online outlets. Results may also be shared with funding partners.

If you have any questions about this program, please contact us at Support@cclsociety.org.